Local students shine at Skills Manitoba

By Lorne Stelmach

Four local vocational students showed off their skills recently at the 28th annual Skills Manitoba competition at RRC Polytech in Winnipeg.

In a test of strength, speed, creativity, and technical mastery that their chosen career paths demand, the next generation of local skilled professionals were involved in the competition, which saw about 500 secondary and post-secondary/apprentice students challenge their peers in over 40 categories.

From this region, Brady Peters of W.C. Miller Collegiate in Altona and Colton Pedersen of Northlands Parkway Collegiate in Winkler brought home gold medals in carpentry and electrical installations, respectively, while NPC students Susie Boldt (aesthetics) and Mya Thiessen (nail technology) earned silver.

Peters enjoyed being involved in the competition.

"It was a good experience," he said. "There were lots of new faces that I got to meet, and it was pretty cool just competing against other top carpentry students."

"I was nervous going into it ... but once we started, I felt a lot better once I could just focus on what I was doing with nobody else around me," Peters noted. "It was pretty intense. There wasn't as much time. The time felt shorter when I was building than what I thought it would, so I had to work pretty fast the whole time. And I only finished with about eight minutes left."

He is grateful to have such a good vocational program available to him.

"I really like it, and it's just something different than just sitting in class all day, more hands-on."

Boldt likewise really enjoyed the experience of being in her first Skills Manitoba competition.

"It was such a blessing. I had so much fun. It was truly a dream come true, she said. "It was quite intense. I was competing against some girls older than me, so that part was kind of scary, but it was mostly pretty fun getting to show my skills like that and competing."

She admitted to having some nerves going into it, but she had confidence from the training she has received.

"I had a great coach who taught me everything really well. I felt really well prepared going into it," Bolt said. "We are so blessed to have such great programs and teachers who are available to us here."

Thiessen was also grateful for having the opportunity.

"I really enjoyed it. It was a fun experience," she said. "I competed against some competitors who were older than me and maybe had a bit more experience. That was a bit nerve wracking."

"I practiced quite a lot at home," she noted. "A lot of my days, I sit and practice my art ... and I get my teacher to help me so that I can practice my skills and perfect my work."

W.C. Miller Collegiate's Brady Peters brought home a gold medal from the Skills Manitoba competition this spring.

Being in Grade 10, she would consider entering again next year.

"I do plan to become a fully licensed aesthetician, and I would see that being my career."

Pederson could not be reached for comment by press time.

Gold medal winners at the provincial event have the opportunity to be part of Team Manitoba and compete at the Skills Canada national competition in Toronto May 26-30.

“Morden is growing, planning, thriving”

By Lorne Stelmach

Optimism marked the overall tone of Morden Mayor Nancy Penner’s state of the city address at the annual meeting of the Morden Chamber of Commerce last Thursday.

Penner acknowledged the challenges faced by the city, such as a need for a solution for wastewater treatment, but she mostly offered encouragement for what lies ahead.

“Morden is growing. Morden is planning. Morden is thriving, and together we are building a future we can all be proud of,” she said. “Morden continues to be a place of opportunity, growth, and strong community spirit.

“Over the past year, we have seen not only progress in infrastructure and development, but also the resilience and collaboration that defines who we are,” Penner said. “We will continue to prioritize smart growth, strong partnerships, and responsible planning. Because the decisions we make today will shape the Morden of tomorrow.”

Penner noted how growth must be managed thoughtfully, and she shared how the city made significant investments last year in infrastructure—from upgrades to roads and sidewalks to critical improvements in the water systems—and they have continued working towards a wastewater solution.

She then touched on the city’s strategic planning process, noting how it focuses on four key priorities: enhancing quality of life, strengthening infrastructure and services, supporting economic growth, and building strong partnerships. Council has also partnered with the Morden Community Development Corporation (MCDC) to develop a strategic plan that aligns their efforts and strengthens their shared vision for economic growth, investment attraction, and long-term prosperity in Morden.

“The city continues to work to support local businesses on several fronts,” Penner said. “The phase one expansion of the industrial park will provide the space needed for our businesses to meet their growth potential.

“The city also recognizes that growing businesses need the right skills and talent to reach their full potential. That’s why we continue to invest in strategic partnerships with educational institutions and with provincial and federal funders—partnerships that deliver programming responsive to the real, evolving needs of employers right here in our community.”

Last year, the city supported the purchase of Boundary Trails Place through the MCDC, securing a permanent home for many services in the community including the community medical clinic without adding cost to ratepayers.

“This was an important step in ensuring continued access to health care and professional services close to home,” Penner said. “Because when we invest in health, we invest in the strength of our entire community.”

She went on to highlight the increasing importance of regional collaboration.

“We know that many of the challenges we face are not unique to Morden. That is why we work closely with our neighbours in Winkler and the RM of Stanley,” Penner said. “We share challenges such as aging infrastructure, water security, and of course wastewater. We are also exploring opportunities for enhanced regional services such as police services along with a current study underway for the feasibility of a regional airport.

> STATE OF THE CITY, FROM PG. 3

"By working together, we can achieve more than we ever could alone."

As the city looks to the future, Penner said they remain focused on sustainable growth, and she acknowledged the impact and concerns in regards to wastewater capacity.

"We agree that this is a key infrastructure need for our community. We know the cost of doing nothing has a far greater impact compared to the cost of taking action now," she said. "This is why council has approved Stantec to proceed with the next phase, including the pre-selection process for our future wastewater treatment facility.

"This is an important step ... this council is committed to advancing the project, working toward environmental approvals, submitting our Environment Act proposal and positioning ourselves to move into the construction tender phase by year end.

"This is critical infrastructure for our community. Quite simply, we can no longer afford to delay. The cost of inaction is too great, not just financially but in missed opportunities for growth and development."

Penner then reflected on the need for increased information for and communication with the community.

"This spring, we'll be hosting public information sessions focused on our wastewater project ... an opportunity for residents to learn more, ask questions and understand how this investment will shape the future of our community."

Penner then took a moment to thank the city staff for their dedication to the community.

"A strong city is one that takes care of its people, and I truly believe that includes the people who work for the city," she said. "We are committed to supporting staff, creating opportunities for growth and building a workplace where people can build meaningful careers. That commitment is reflected in our ability to attract and retain top talent and in the strength of our internal leadership.

"Our new police chief, fire chief, deputy city manager and director of community development were all promoted from within, something we are incredibly proud of," Penner noted. "Council deeply values each and every member of our team. Your dedication helps make Morden a place people choose, not just to live but to belong."

NO FRILLS STORE ON THE WAY

Penner closed out her speech with a special announcement

"One of the most meaningful measures of a growing, thriving community is the continued investment from you, our businesses, that see opportunity here ... opportunity in our people, our economy and our future. It brings myself and council great pleasure to share some exciting news that reflects exactly just that ... Morden has secured a new No Frills grocery store.

"This is more than just a new retail development. It represents increased choice and affordability for our residents, new employment opportunities and continued confidence from major national brands in Morden as a place to invest and grow," Penner said. "Access to affordable groceries is important for every household, and this addition will help strengthen our local food landscape while supporting the day-to-day needs of our community.

"I want to acknowledge the work of council, administration, and our partners who helped make this happen. Attracting this kind of investment doesn't happen by chance. It's the result of long-term planning, relationship-building and a shared vision for Morden's future.

"This announcement is another sign that Morden is not standing still," she concluded. "We are moving forward, growing responsibly and continuing to build a community where people want to live, work and invest."

Starting the conversation about housing

By Lorne Stelmach

Community members came together last Tuesday at Rendezvous to be part of a conversation around housing in Morden.

The night wasn't expected to generate solutions but rather to serve as a starting point for further discussion about what is seen as a tremendous challenge for the community.

Kevin Driedger, executive director of 500 Stephen Community Centre, which organized the event, felt good about how the discussion turned out.

"What I liked was the blend of people whose work is involved with housing, like Genesis House and Habitat for Humanity ... it's kind of central to their work ... but then there were also just community members who are interested, so they could be learning from each other," he said.

"I didn't go into expecting that we would come up with sort of solution in the end. That wasn't the goal. It was let's have this conversation and see where things might go ... help us learn from each other."

Overall, Driedger said it was clear that there is a real concern about the shortage of both available and affordable housing options in Morden.

"And there's a big chasm in terms of how to move from that kind of concern to having any kind of action, and who can do that ... I think these kinds of conversations need to happen in order to build up connection, build up community awareness. I'm hoping it did a little of that."

Ang Braun, executive director of Genesis House, touched on the challenges their clients face when trying to rebuild their lives after leaving an abusive relationship.

"For housing, there really has never been much of a glimmer of hope," she said. "Those problems haven't changed ... they are worse now, and that is unfortunate to have worked at something for a long, long time."

She noted the province had added a housing benefit, but there are a number of restrictions and limitations. There are overall a variety of barriers that people face, Braun noted, and even if they have the resources to afford a place, they often cannot even find one.

Driedger said community conversation on this topic will continue.

Concerned community members gathered at Rendezvous last week to talk housing, led by 500 Stephen Community Centre's Kevin Driedger.

"I want to be in touch with our board as well as the community mobilization program, which is kind of part of us, about what might our role be in moving this conversation forward and moving this conversation towards action. What role do we have here?" he said. "I would certainly be glad to host more like this ... and I could see that as the role of 500 Stephen, to bring people together again for more conversation."

"It's obvious that the challenge is real, and the concern is real," Driedger said. "And there's a lot of knowledge out there. That was evident. There's people who really know a lot about this."

He sees events like this as fitting in well with 500 Stephen's goal of building connections and relationships.

"We're not in a place to build new housing, but we can bring people together that have a variety of different perspectives and experiences to help foster collaboration and help foster solutions."

Mom saves son from fast-flowing creek

By Voice staff

The quick action of a mother saved the life of a four-year-old boy who fell into a creek southeast of Winkler last week.

RCMP say the boy fell into a creek near his home on Monday, April 13 just before 5 p.m.

He and his older brother were playing in the yard when they moved past some trees towards the water without permission.

The younger boy was playing on ice and snow near the creek that suddenly broke off, causing him to fall in.

The older brother ran inside to get their mother. She ran to the creek and then across the road when she couldn't see the boy. He had been pulled by the current through a culvert.

The mother, who didn't know how to swim, jumped into the creek and pulled her son to the bank with the help of a neighbour. She then started performing CPR and successfully revived him while a neighbour called 911.

The child, who was alert, was treated at the scene by paramedics before being transported via air ambulance to hospital in Winnipeg.

At last report, he was in stable condition.

RCMP remind all Manitobans to stay away from the edges of streams, rivers, ponds, and lakes to prevent falls into cold and often fast-flowing water. The combination of melting ice and additional rain or snow can also lead to higher water levels that can destabilize stream and riverbanks, increasing the risk of accidents.

Time marches on

Have you noticed in recent years that various summer festivals are starting to attract the music you like?

For years maybe you thought, like I did, that the festivals seemed to be geared to an older crowd, attracting musical acts that reflected those tastes. Sure, the music was good, there was no question there. It's just that it represented a different era that maybe you weren't as interested in.

You would find yourself saying things like, "Haven't they already had this band here three or four times before?" and "I didn't know these guys were still alive" and such.

Then lately you started noticing something. A change was in the air. The festivals were starting to showcase different music. Younger music. Music that appealed to you. How exciting.

Finally, you thought, the festivals are looking to appeal to younger people—like me!

Well, I have some bad news for you. Brace yourself. The festivals aren't appealing to younger people. You just got older.

I know it's difficult to believe, but it's true. Don't believe me? The aches and pains, the grey hair or lack thereof are not enough to convince you? Let's do a small experiment.

Take a band that had a hit song in 1992. Maybe a band you really loved. You suddenly find out they're coming to your local festival and you're so excited you pull out those old skinny jeans to see if they still fit.

Well, 1992 was 34 years ago. This is no longer the young hip band you remember and no, the younger demographic around you is not super excited that they are coming. They are responding to your inquiries with comments like "who?" no matter how many times you force them to listen to that one song you loved so much.

A teenager listening to music from 1992 today would be like teenage you listening to the hits from 1958.

Look, there's nothing wrong with older music. I love some old music and some of my best friends enjoy older music. Heck, I remember 21-year-old me going to a concert at the old Exhibition Stadium in Toronto to see The Who. I didn't know who they were, but my friends were excited, so I went with them. It was good music. But it was older music.

I say enjoy it for what it is: music from the previous century. A trip down memory lane. You put in your time having to tolerate your parents' and grandparents' music on the stage.

Letters

LABELS DON'T TELL THE FULL STORY

As the executive director of a local food bank, I have the privilege of meeting people from all walks of life. And one thing continues to stay with me: how quickly we, as a society, place labels on others—and how rarely those labels tell the full story.

Behind every label is a person. Someone who is trying. Someone who is carrying more than we can see.

Many of the people I meet did not choose the circumstances they were born into. Some are working incredibly hard to break cycles that have shaped their families for generations. Anyone who has ever tried to change deeply rooted patterns knows—this is not easy work. It takes time, strength, and often more resilience than most of us will ever be asked to find.

I remember a young man who, after years of unemployment, finally found a job. The pride in his voice when he shared the news was something I will never forget.

Access CU reports on a year of growth, change

By Lorne Stelmach

The past year was both a busy one and a year of transition for the Access Credit Union, and that was a theme in the presentations offered as part of the financial institution's recent online annual general meeting.

One significant talking point in both the presentations and question and answer session that followed centred around amalgamations and recent branch closures.

In the greater southern region, it included the Sanford branch closing and consolidating with the new Kenaston Crossing location in Winnipeg, the Plum Coulee branch closing and consolidating with Winkler, and the Emerson branch closing and consolidating with Altona.

"Sometimes these benefits are not as visible on a day to day basis as they are behind the scenes," board chairperson Curt Letkeman said in addressing a question on the benefits of closures and amalgamations.

He cited an example from a number of years ago where previous amalgamations at that time were found to be saving the credit union $5 million a year in operational costs.

"So we are seeing benefits. They are sometimes not necessarily visible to members, but we do, when we talk about rates and trying to be the most competitive," he said. "We talk also about what we are able to do in communities, and a lot of the community support would be challenging for small credit unions if they were not a part of a larger, stronger organization such as Access.

"The size allows us to weather some storms," he added. "On occasion, there's been some financial difficulties in certain communities and certain businesses that, had they been on their own, this credit union may not have been able to sustain some of those things."

"While our branch network is evolving, our commitment to serving members in those communities remains strong," president and CEO Myrna Wiebe noted in her report. "Collaboration, transparency and accountability will continue to guide our decisions as we work to deliver sustainable value for our members and clients."

Wiebe emphasized that Access remained focused on strengthening its balance sheet, managing risk responsibly, and ensuring sustainable growth for the credit union.

"Both our loan and deposit portfolios achieved meaningful gains, supported by disciplined lending practices and strong member engagement. Operational efficiencies and strategic investments further enhanced our overall financial stability," she stated.

"Our loan portfolio delivered a strong performance this year, reflecting disciplined growth and continued demand across our markets. Total loans reached $12.4 billion, supported by $12.0 billion in deposits and a solid balance sheet with total assets of $14.1 billion," Peter said. "This strength translated into net income of $76.1 million and a gross operating margin of $113.5 million."

Wiebe's report covered a lot of ground, starting with her succeeding Larry Davey in stepping into the role of president and chief executive officer in September.

"I am grateful for the opportunity to lead at a moment that is so pivotal to advancing our purpose, supporting our members, our communities and our employees," she said. "The strategic priorities established by our board of directors centre on enhancing the member and client experience, supporting community well-being, creating opportunities to add value for members and fostering employee growth and development."

It wasn't just employment—it was dignity, hope, a step forward. I also remember a young woman with a deeply kind heart. Even while facing her own challenges, she found ways to give back, to support others, to be present. Over time, these two found each other. They were not perfect. They came from difficult backgrounds. But they were trying—honestly and earnestly—to build something better together.

And yet, when it came time to find housing, doors kept closing. Not because of who they were, but because of assumptions tied to where they came from. Decisions were made about them before they were even given a chance. And slowly, the progress they had fought so hard for began to slip away. It is difficult to witness how easily hope can be undone—not by lack of effort, but by lack of opportunity.

At the same time, I have seen something else that continues to move me deeply.

I have seen people—complete strangers to one another—stand side by side and offer support in the most genuine ways. Often, these are not people with abundance or stability. These are individuals who are barely staying afloat themselves. And yet, they are the ones who show up, who listen, who care, who offer a steady presence.

Perhaps it is because they understand. Because they know what it feels like to struggle, to be judged, to be unseen. And in that understanding, they choose compassion.

This is not a letter of blame. It is simply a reflection—and a gentle reminder.

The way we see people matters. The assumptions we make, the stories we tell ourselves about others, the quiet "no" that closes a door—these things have real consequences. Sometimes, without realizing it, we are not just failing to help—we are becoming part of the barrier that keeps someone from moving forward.

Maybe we can pause before we judge. Maybe we can choose to see the person, not the label. Because sometimes, the people who have the least to give are the ones who show us the most about what it truly means to be human.

GOVERNMENT CORRUPTION

What is going on in this clown world we call Canada? Never have there in Canadian history been so many floor crossers in such a short time. It seems democracy is dead in Canada. These floor crossing MPs must be being bribed, coerced, extorted to make them cross over like this. The smell of government corruption is ripe in the air.

Now, like King Charles, you finally get to reign.

Eventually, in several decades, your kids will be experiencing the same thing as music from the 2020s creeps into the concert scene.

They will finally be excited for the

In the meantime, their kids will be annoyed by the choices but, as we know, their turn will come.

Barnswallows Quilt Show coming up May 1-3

By Lorne Stelmach

From its humble beginnings 40 years ago, what became the Barnswallows Quilters has come a long way.

It marks the milestone with its upcoming annual show set for May 1-3 at the Access Event Centre in Morden.

As always, the show serves as a showcase of the creative talent from across the region. Every year it brings a wide variety of work that is both traditional and contemporary, and that is something organizers are always keen to highlight.

"They're all very artistic," said co-chair Lesley Andrew. "Maybe it's because of Manitoba's long winters. We have more time to do these kinds of things in winter time."

The work of quilters and fabric artists from across the region will be up at the Access Event Centre next weekend.

"There is a lot of talent for sure, and it's neat to see it come through in so many different ways. It's not just the traditional quilts. There's beautiful wall hangings and a variety of things."

The quilt show had modest beginnings, Andrew recalled, noting it started when Gloria Dyck converted an old horse barn on her property into a gathering space for friends to sew.

"She gathered her friends to hand quilt a quilt for charity," she said. "They met regularly and enjoyed having a show and tell. So this event eventually led to having a public show."

The variety of work displayed for the show has grown to include all manner of fabric work by artisans from all over southern Manitoba.

The 2026 event runs Friday, May 1 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., Saturday, May 2 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday, May 3 from noon to 5 p.m. in the event centre community hall.

Registration happens on Wednesday April 29 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. in the facility's Morden Chiropractic meeting room. While Barnswallows members get preference if space becomes limited, the show is open to all quilters.

"You don't have to be a member, although we do have a lot of quilts and we may not be able to hang up everyone's quilts," Andrew noted. "We welcome everyone with different levels of expertise, whether you're a first time quilter or you're learning new techniques or you're sharing your inspiration with others ... anyone can register a quilt for the show."

As always, the show will shine a spotlight on a feature quilter. This year it's Joyce Debreuil, who will have several pieces on display.

Another feature of the show is the annual challenge where creators are given a theme to work with for the following year. This year's theme is "Connection."

"It is always interesting to see. They take a theme, and what one person sees with it is different from what another person sees," said Andrew, who shared that the 2027 theme is "Ruby" in honour of the quilting showcase's four decades in the community.

A new feature this year will be a display by a fiber art network from B.C. with the theme of "Up Close." The show will also feature a merchant mall overseen by Aspen Grove Quilting. And, of course, the Barnswallow's Boutique allows members to have some of their work available for sale as well. There will also be a rainbow auction, with proceeds supporting South Central Cancer Resource and Boundary Trails Health Centre women's health services.

Andrew shared that they will have perhaps around 60 high school students tour the show on the Friday, and she hopes that it will inspire the next generation of quilters.

"And we're always encouraging new members ... everyone is welcome. It doesn't matter what level of expertise you are," she said.

More information is available online at the barnswallowquilters.wordpress.com.

This year's feature quilter is Joyce Debreuil

By Lorne Stelmach

Barnswallows Quilters's annual quilt show always puts the spotlight on a featured quilter, and the choice for this year's event was quite surprised to be selected for the honour.

The work of Joyce Debreuil will be featured at the show set for the May 1-3 at the Access Event Centre in Morden.

"I was astonished," said Debreuil. "I've actually only belonged to the group for a couple years, although I've been quilting for a lot longer than that ... so I was surprised and very flattered."

"I've always sewn quilts, but I would have never imagined being a featured quilter."

The displays of the featured quilters often vary from being a sort of retrospective of their work to perhaps having a representative theme. For Debreuil, family connection is the common thread between many of her pieces.

"I have nine great grandchildren, and I made each one of them a quilt with their name on the top, so that's going to be the centrepiece," she shared.

Working with fabrics and especially sewing has long been a part of Debreuil's life.

"I sewed all my life, but mostly I sewed for my kids," she noted. "I started quilting about 25 years ago after I retired."

"I like working with colour, and I've always sewn and worked with fabric."

She sees much of her work as not being very traditional in most ways.

"Most of my quilts are not traditional patterns. The ones I'm going to show are not traditional patterns mostly," Debreuil said.

She referred to a couple mottos she likes to ascribe to when it comes to her pieces.

"If everything fits but one doesn't quite match, it's a mistake, but if nothing matches, then it looks great," she said. "Another quote from a book I really enjoyed was 10 colours might be wrong, but a hundred colours are always right ... if you have enough colours, it will be fine. My display will be very colourful."

FTC brings Silent Sky to the stage next week

By Ashleigh Viveiros

Flatlands Theatre Company wraps up its 20th season next week with playwright Lauren Gunderson's Silent Sky.

Running April 30 to May 3 at the P.W. Enns Centennial Concert Hall in Winkler, the show shines a spotlight on the story of a pivotal 19th-century astronomer.

"Silent Sky follows the life and career of Henrietta Leavitt, a very important astronomer from the early 1900s who sadly does not get a lot of credit," says Amber Enns, a FTC acting veteran who is venturing into her first time as director with this production. "She lived and worked at a time when women were not allowed to publish under their own names."

The play spans decades of Leavitt's life, starting with her beginning work as a human "computer" at the Harvard Observatory when women weren't allowed to even touch a telescope, never mind express an original idea.

Despite those challenges, Leavitt would go on to discover how to accurately measure the vast distances between stars and planets.

Her work revolutionized astronomy, eventually allowing Edwin Hubble—of Hubble Space Telescope fame—to prove the existence of other galaxies beyond the Milky Way and determine that the universe is expanding.

"We see a dramatized, romanticized version of her life and relationships, so there's a lot of love, there's a lot of friendship, a lot of laughter," Enns says. "And we get to see the science in a universally understood way through music and through mutual discovery, which is really fun."

The small cast includes Angela Klassen as Leavitt, Denice Pauls and Jeanette Hoepfner as fellow female astronomers Williamina Fleming and Annie Jump Cannon, Hannah Franz as Margaret Leavitt, and Darren Kehler as Peter Shaw, assistant to the head astronomer at the observatory.

Klassen says the story behind the real-life Leavitt is truly fascinating.

As to the attraction to quilting, Debreuil went back to her family connections with her creations.

"They're useful. When I give people quilts, I tell them don't hang them on the wall. Use them. So these baby quilts are all going to have been used already."

Debreuil sees there being a lot of talented quilters in the region, so it is nice that this show puts it all on display.

"It's high quality work," she said, noting there is an upcoming national show in Winnipeg where she would love to see local quilters on display. "I went to one in Edmonton a couple years ago, and lots of the quilters here could easily show there and not be ashamed."

And as for the local show, she also looks forward to meeting and connecting not only with other quilters and aficionados but perhaps even inspire interest among youth.

"It's nice to see when a few younger people come in," Debreuil said, recalling when she taught a 15-year-old great niece to quilt. That niece went on to make a huge queen-size quilt for her parents that will be in the show.

"This is a bit of a push to get some younger people interested," she noted. "It's a bit of an expensive hobby, especially to get started. Without having somebody to help, it's hard to get started, but there's a few."

omy in a time when women were supposed to be at home and getting married and having kids, which is a fine thing, but she was doing something else," she says. "She was a very interesting person. When you read the history, of course some things get changed for the show, but there's a lot of accuracy in what we're showing."

Playing Leavitt's sister, Margaret, a fictional character, Franz has the opportunity to provide a contrast to the astronomer's life.

"She's really what Henrietta's life would have been if she hadn't gone to Harvard, if she'd stayed home and been a teacher, a homemaker, whatever options were available to her there," she says. "Margaret is really that past part of her life kind of calling back to her: this is where you came from."

Franz says the writing in the play drew her to be a part of it.

"I read the script and it was so beautiful, I had to do it," she says. "The story is really well told. And it's a story about science, but told in a beautifully artistic way; there's allegory and metaphor to explain it ... it's an artistic rendering of a mathematical, scientific story."

Show times are 7 p.m. nightly April 30, May 1, and May 2 and 3 p.m. on May 3. Tickets are available at winklerconcerthall.ca.

Stride Together Run & Walk coming up Saturday, May 9

By Ashleigh Viveiros

A long-running community event is undergoing a change in ownership this year.

But while the benefiting cause may have changed, the giving heart of what was formerly known as the Curtis Klassen Memorial Run & Walk to Remember most certainly has not.

The Community Exchange has stepped up to carry on the annual 5K/10K run and walk, which has been operating for nearly two decades.

They've changed the name to the Stride Together Run & Walk for TCE and have introduced a new logo as well, but other than that, the event will look much the same as in past years, shares organizer Susie Fisher.

"On the outside, most things are going to look the same as they always have," she said. "We're meeting in the same place—Altona Centennial Park—on Saturday, May 9, and we've kept it the same weekend, the same start time as it's always been."

Participants will set out from the park that day at 9 a.m. There are categories for both adult and youth participants, with 5K and 10K routes through Altona.

After the run, participants and the community at large is invited back to the park to enjoy an awards ceremony, fun races and bouncy castles for the kids, and a barbecue lunch served up by Sun Valley Co-op (runners get lunch for free, for all others it's by donation).

"We really want to make it a community event for everybody, not just the people who participated in the run itself," Fisher said.

Race registration is $56.34 for adults and $34.69 for kids. You can register online at mraweb.ca/event/stride-together-run-walk-for-tce or contact Fisher at 204-216-1577 or susie@tcealtona.ca for more information. The deadline to sign-up is Friday, May 8, but if you want one of the limited free event T-shirts you're encouraged to register sooner rather than later.

As race day nears, excitement is growing at TCE, Fisher said.

"We're really honoured that the Curtis Klassen Memorial Fund thought of us and invited us to consider taking it over," she said. "It's a huge honour that they trust us with this event."

The former Curtis Klassen Memorial Run & Walk to Remember has a new name, logo, and cause. The May 9 event is now the Stride Together Run & Walk in support of The Community Exchange.

Organizers at the memorial fund decided it was time to pass the torch, and TCE was eager to pick it up and run with it.

"As a fairly new non-profit organization, we're constantly brainstorming ways that we can involve the community and rally people together," said Fisher, noting events like this serve not only to raise funds for TCE's programming but to also get the word out about the organization. "This seemed like a really good opportunity for us to spread the word about what TCE is, what we do, who we are in the community. A lot of people don't even know we exist at this point. So we're trying to raise that awareness."

Funds generated by the event by way of runner registrations and corporate sponsorships will support TCE's work in building a safer, healthier, and more connected community.

"We'll see it going towards some of the things that we feel the race represents," shared Fisher. "So things like our Community Connector program, which is our drop-in program. We're open Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m to 1 p.m. and we welcome folks from all walks of life into our space."

"It doesn't matter what you are, where you live, where you come from, what challenges you're facing, we just want you to come and have coffee with us," she said. "That's our mission here is to build bridges and connections between all the people in Altona."

Smile Cookies to support Altona's "Beautiful Project"

By Ashleigh Viveiros

"The Beautiful Project" in Altona is poised to get a big funding boost next week as the recipients of Tim Hortons Smile Cookie Week.

From April 27 to May 3, the proceeds from every Smile Cookie sold at the Altona restaurant will go to support the construction of the community's future soccer hub.

"We were thrilled to have been approached by them—they came to us," said Altona Soccer chair Karl Enns. "It speaks very highly of their interaction with and staying involved in the community."

Altona Soccer volunteers will be helping to decorate dozens of boxes of cookies next week so they can be sold at the restaurant and also delivered to businesses and organizations throughout the community.

"Based on the numbers from last year, we would love to see 10,000 cookies sold," Enns said, noting pre-orders have already begun arriving. "This is the week for pre-orders. Businesses will have received emails and they're going to see flyers and posters and lawn signs—it's all over the place."

Pre-ordering allows them to best plan for sales, especially large-scale orders, but you can also simply stop by Tim Hortons anytime starting Monday to buy a cookie or one of the plush toys available to help the cause.

The Beautiful Project encompasses Altona Soccer's $600,000 phase one plan to build multiple new soccer pitches—including a FIFA-sized pitch to allow for higher-level play—and surrounding greenspace on six acres of land behind the Millennium Exhibition Centre. Phase two, priced at about $150,000, will redevelop the existing community soccer pitches at W.C. Miller Collegiate and École Parkside School.

Fundraising is off to a good start, Enns shared.

"The response from the community already has been really great. Everybody's very positively supportive," he said, noting they're already raised about a third of what's needed to complete the ambitious project.

The plan is to get started on phase one this summer.

"There's definitely a lot of prep work that's going to be done," Enns said. "If everything goes to plan, we'll start excavating one of the pitches, which requires digging down and putting in layers and drainage."

The hope is to have the first phase done in 2027. Phase two will then follow as funds allow.

"We're phasing the project over this year and next year, but if we need to extend that into another year, we're totally okay with doing that," Enns said. "Ultimately, we want a really great quality soccer park at the end of the day."

"Soccer has been growing, not only in Altona but across the region, southern Manitoba, and even across Canada," he said of the importance of this project to the community. "Youth registration numbers, year over year, have been increasing anywhere from 10-15 per cent."

Altona archive highlights growth, digitization at AGM

By Holly Thorne-Wiebe

Continued growth in digital archives, community partnerships, and volunteer engagement were key themes at the Altona & District Heritage Research Centre's 25th annual general meeting last week.

Chair Dave Harms reflected on the organization's steady evolution since its early days. Established in 1999 and incorporated in 2001, the archive has grown to hold more than 47,000 digitized photos, with additional materials added weekly.

"We've had our ups and downs," Harms noted in his annual report, pointing to both the challenges and progress over the past year.

Among the highlights was the hiring of Brent Giesbrecht following the retirement of longtime bookkeeper Mary Dyck, who served the organization for 25 years. The centre also welcomed a student intern from W.C. Miller Collegiate, Alyssa Ewankevich, who has been assisting with digitizing records and updating files as part of her 80-hour school placement.

Volunteer contributions continue to play a central role. Harms credited Liz Rempel Wieler, Tina Rempel Siemens, and Mark Villeneuve with bringing fresh perspectives to the board, while also acknowledging Elmer Heinrichs for helping keep the archives open to the public on Mondays when possible.

The organization also received financial support through grants from the Altona Community Foundation, the Town of Altona, and the RM of Rhineland. Those funds have helped offset the cost of new equipment and ongoing operations.

Secretary Art Wiebe reported that 20 new items were cataloged over the year, with additional materials waiting to be processed. He noted that all the holdings on the "North Wall" are now searchable digitally, marking a significant step forward in accessibility.

Wiebe emphasized that community involvement remains essential.

"The two key qualifications for all of us remain time and interest," he said, encouraging more residents to get involved.

Efforts to raise awareness have expanded in recent years through media interviews, mall displays, and social media updates. The archive has also strengthened partnerships with local organizations, including a second year working with W.C. Miller's internship program and ongoing collaboration with Mennonite Collegiate Institute.

Looking ahead, the group continues to focus on digitization, long-term planning, and space management. Approximately 30 per cent of archive storage space remains available, though discussions are underway about future needs.

Harms closed the meeting by encouraging residents to take an interest in local history and make use of the archives.

"Invite the people you meet who are interested in history to check out the archives," he said.

Administrative hires at four BLS D schools

By Voice staff

Border Land School Division made several hiring announcements for the upcoming school year last week.

Stepping into the principal role at Emerson School in September is Reggie Giesbrecht, who has worked at the school for the past decade in various capacities as a classroom, guidance, and resource teacher.

"Reggie's vision of leadership is grounded in relationships, clarity, and a shared commitment to student success," the division shared. "He believes that an effective teaching principal leads by being present, approachable, and actively engaged in both the classroom and broader school community."

Also appointed principal is Shelley Gray, who will head up École Parkside School in Altona. Gray has been in education for nearly 20 years, including 12 years teaching all subjects at École Morden Middle School.

"Shelley believes that the foundation for all leadership resides in relationships, trust, and a clear focus on student learning," BLS D shared. "Her goal is to foster a culture where students are engaged in meaningful learning, where staff feel supported in their professional growth, and where families feel welcomed as partners in the education of their children."

Additionally, two vice-principal positions have been filled: Melanie Mattson at Shevchenko School and Stormy Roach at Roseau Valley School.

Mattson has spent 22 years teaching multiple subjects in K-12 with a focus on early and middle years. She has been the acting vice-principal at Shevchenko for the past two years.

Roach has taught all subjects in the early years since starting as a teacher in 2019, both in the Winnipeg School Division and for the last two years at Roseau Valley School. She was previously an education assistant for seven years.

They're also seeing increased interest on the adult level, with plans in the works to launch men's and women's teams to compete in provincial leagues in the future.

"To do that, we need a home pitch that we can play on that is of the appropriate size and quality to compete," Enns said of the FIFA-sized field in the plans.

More larger, higher quality pitches will also allow Altona to play host to more sporting events at all age levels.

"Our high school teams do phenomenal. We make the provincials finals almost every year," Enns said, "but we're unable to host the provincials because of the limited number of pitches in the community, at least quality pitches that can be used for tournament purposes.

"With this soccer park together with the schools and their facilities, we can host any size of soccer related event that we would want."

Morden chamber of commerce reports on a busy year

By Lorne Stelmach

Tyler Schroeder went out on a positive note in his last address as chairperson of the Morden Chamber of Commerce last week.

As he prepared to hand the reigns to Stephane Warnock at the annual meeting April 16, Schroeder touched on the progress and achievements of the organization in the past year.

“At the Morden chamber, every action we take aligns with our four core pillars,” said Schroeder. “We are the voice of business amplifying your concerns. We are a source of information, providing critical and timely insights. We offer networking opportunities, connecting the businesses for growth, and we provide promotion of local businesses, championing Morden’s economic vitality.”

Schroeder began by highlighting the chamber’s vital role of advocacy within a framework that is guided by the feedback of local businesses.

The chamber addressed such issues as the need to deal with wastewater to concerns that revolved around the seasonal closure of a section of Eighth Street in downtown Morden for events.

“We partnered with the Winkler chamber and City of Morden to urge the Manitoba chamber to advocate for increased provincial and federal funding beyond the standard one third contribution,” he noted, specifically in reference to support for wastewater treatment, which he emphasized is urgent for Morden and threatens the economic growth of the city.

Schroeder went on to highlight the board’s strategic planning.

“We successfully completed our three-year strategic plan focussed on organizational stability and capacity ... achieving goals like enabling growth and enhancing member services,” he said, noting they were now going to be developing a new plan for 2026-2029.

The chamber is also in a healthy situation financially, Schroeder noted.

“Financial strength is fueling our ambition,” he said. “Our financial position is robust. Our balance sheet holds over $75,000 in reserves.

“Our sustained financial success has allowed us to accumulate a combined two-year net profit of over $12,000, enabling a bold 2026 budget with a temporary deficit (of just over $9,000) to invest in staffing and member impact while focusing on driving new revenue growth.”

Schroeder expressed gratitude for the operating grant from the City of Morden as well as the chamber team that includes executive director Clare Agnew, member services co-ordinator Tara Wyton, and social media and marketing co-ordinator Lili Krushel.

Schroeder then highlighted other initiatives, which included over a dozen different events in 2025 and even more planned for 2026, ranging from the Small Business Week luncheon to the annual business awards gala.

And he was pleased to cite the growth of the chamber, which saw membership increase to 241 members in 2025.

“Morden’s future is bright,” Schroeder concluded. “Morden is brimming with opportunity. The chamber is uniquely positioned to drive impact backed by strong leadership, a dedicated team and forward thinking board of directors.”

The annual meeting also brought about some changes in the executive, with treasurer Connie Pauls and directors Derek Hamilton and Brent Laverty seeing their terms come to an end. Re-elected were directors Leah Olson and Mariyam Tsygankova, and newly elected were Jody Scott, Josh MacFarlane, and Chauntel Dyck. Also continuing on the board from 2025 are Derek Wiebe, Zoraida Constantino, and Nicole Walske.

Many Hands reflects 2025’s accomplishments, growing needs

By Lorne Stelmach

The past year was one of growth with both increased need and increased challenges for the Many Hands Resource Centre.

Directors were encouraged, though, by the number of people who turned out for the annual meeting last Wednesday, which tells them what Many Hands is doing in and for the community matters to people.

“We had a strong turnout, and it was really encouraging to see the level of support from the community,” said executive director Mariyam Tsygankova.

Tsygankova reflected on the increased need in the community and the demands on the programs and services provided by Many Hands.

In 2025, the food bank usage increased by 20 per cent, and this upward trend has continued into the current year with an additional 14 per cent increase. Many Hands is now serving about 130 families each week through the food bank program.

“The past year has been a year of significant growth for Many Hands for sure, so we are now serving over 400 families representing more than 1,000 individuals, which is a substantial number for a community of our size,” Tsygankova said. “We are seeing a steady increase in demand with some months reaching close to 300 families accessing the food bank, and while we are proud to be able to support so many people, this level of growth also brings real challenges.”

She went on to offer highlights of some of their other programs and services:

- Their soup kitchen serves over 100 warm meals each week.
- Community meal attendance continues to grow, especially through seasonal themed events. They are seeing an average of 150 people come out per meal.
- The Better Access to Groceries (BAG) program participation increased by over 50 per cent after transitioning to a client-choice shopping model.
- The After the Bell summer snack program served 113 families and 257 children in its first year. Funding is approved again for this summer with plans to distribute 800 nutrition kits.
- The Direct Farm Food voucher program provided $46,200 in fresh local food access last season and is expected to support many families again this year.

“I am struck by both how much has been accomplished and how clearly the need in our community continues to grow. Over the past year, Many Hands has continued to be a place of nourishment, welcome, and connection,” co-chair Darcy Wolfe commented in his report with co-chair Julie Plett.

“We believe we are better together—that the challenges we face in our community are best addressed through collaboration, partnerships, volunteers and a shared sense of responsibility. These priorities aren’t just ideas on paper. They are meant to guide how we make decisions, how we write policies, how we allocate resources and how we move forward together as an organization.”

As food insecurity continues to rise, the non-profit has expanded both its services and infrastructure to meet growing community need while maintaining its commitment to dignity, inclusion and compassionate support.

“Of course, along with the increased demand for our services came some very real pressures like space limitations, staff capacity, food supply and the need for stronger systems and governance,” Wolfe noted.

“All of this led us to take a step back earlier this year to think carefully about who we are and where we are going. On January 24, our board and executive director gathered for a full-day strategic planning session. Out of that day came a renewed clarity around our mission.”

As part of that planning and as a way to support their mission, they established board priorities to guide Many Hands over the next three to five years. Those priorities touch on matters of governing with accountability and sustainability in mind, ensuring all patrons are treated with dignity and respect, recognizing the importance of its various food programs in meeting urgent needs while also building connections, and supporting staff and volunteers so they can continue to serve.

Looking ahead, the organization noted space is a significant issue they need to address in order to be able to move forward.

"We've outgrown our current space, so we are facing limitations in food storage, staff capacity and overall program space. Simply put, we do not have enough room to store the amount of food we are receiving or to operate as efficiently as we need to," said Tsygankova.

"At the same time, we are trying to move beyond just responding to immediate needs, so we are investing more in intervention programs, so it's helping people before they reach a crisis point.

"Looking ahead, our focus will be on finding sustainable solutions to those challenges including space, resources and continued growth," she continued. "The need is growing, but so is the support from our community, and that gives us a lot of hope moving forward."

And she stressed they always welcome more volunteers.

"We are open to everybody who thinks they can contribute. We have different programs, not only the food bank. We have nine programs ... and 80 per cent of the physical work is done by volunteers, so we just can't survive without those wonderful people. We always need help."

There were fun and games to be enjoyed Saturday morning as the Small Wonders nursery school hosted a spring carnival in its space in the Westside Community Church building. The event was aimed at raising awareness of and interest in what it has to offer to the community with a variety of morning and afternoon classes for families with children aged two to six. The carnival included crafts, face painting (above), games, and character meet and greets (above, left).

Celebrating the Vibrant Heart of Our Seniors' Communities

In the sun-dappled corridors of Morden and Winkler, there is a warmth that has nothing to do with the thermostat and everything to do with the spirit of the people who reside there. While much is written about the rapid growth of our region's industries, the true crown jewels of the Pembina Valley are our seniors' residences. These aren't just buildings; they are flourishing ecosystems of wisdom, laughter, and lifelong friendship that prove the "golden years" are truly the most radiant.

To walk through the doors of facilities like Morden's Homestead South is to witness a masterclass in community building. There is a palpable sense of "home" that greets you at the entrance—a blend of the comforting aroma of fresh coffee and the lively hum of neighbors sharing stories. These residences have become the heart of our twin cities, offering a beautiful tapestry of support and independence that allows our elders to shine.

What makes the Morden-Winkler corridor so special is the seamless way these homes integrate with the local culture. Our seniors are not "retiring" from life; they are leaning into it. From organized choir practices that fill the halls with song to the fiercely competitive (yet always friendly) games of shuffleboard and crokinole, these spaces are buzzing with energy. It is a joy to see our community's builders—the farmers, teachers, and entrepreneurs who shaped this soil—enjoying the fruits of their labour in such dignity and comfort.

We must also pause to celebrate the incredible staff who breathe life into these residences. The caregivers, culinary teams, and activity coordinators are the unsung heroes of the Pembina Valley.

Their dedication turns a suite into a sanctuary and a meal into a social event. They don't just provide service; they provide kinship. In an era where the world can feel increasingly disconnected, the intergenerational bonds formed here—where grandchildren visit and volunteers share their time—serve as a beautiful reminder of our shared values.

As we look to the future, there is much to be optimistic about. The continued investment in seniors' living in our region is a testament to our commitment to one another. We are creating a legacy where no one is left behind and where every stage of life is celebrated with flair.

In Morden and Winkler, we aren't just building apartments; we are cultivating joy. Our seniors have given us so much, and it is a privilege to see them live their best chapters in environments that are as vibrant, welcoming, and comfortable as the communities they helped create.

Roaring Morden Leos working together to give back

By Lorne Stelmach

The youth wing of a local service organization held a bake sale fundraiser this past weekend to help support their efforts in the community.

The Roaring Morden Leos were selling cupcakes Sunday afternoon at 500 Stephen, and they expected to bring in about $300.

Fundraising, however big or small, is vital for them to be able to do what they can in the community, said treasurer Raidah Arisha.

"It is a way that we know that we have an outlet to give back to the community," she said. "Considering the fact that the community does so much for us, we have so many organizations that look out for the betterment of people ... this is a way for us to give back."

The club has been in existence now since 2022 and currently has about a dozen members ranging in age from 13-17.

Arisha said the program is a great opportunity for youth to get involved and gain experience.

"It is very engaging for youth," she said. "We are all just so swarmed in our everyday lives, and there are points where we might feel oh, it's just too swamped, and we might take things for granted.

"Here, while we're working, it really gives us the opportunity to look at the broader picture and see how we can help out those in need who need the help, and we also see how much we get ourselves and how much more we can provide from what we have."

That's why organizing and running events like the bake sale are so integral to the club's work.

"Our club is mainly involved in fundraising for organizations which are asking for or needing donations for doing their initiatives," Arisha explained. "The last fundraiser that we did was a puzzle night fundraiser where we donated a portion of our money to Gateway Resources. That was a great fundraiser for us. It went really really well."

Arisha noted they're grateful for the ongoing guidance of the adult Lions Club.

"It provides us with great guidance and great support on our journey of fundraising."

Legion hosting fundraiser for washroom upgrades

By Lorne Stelmach

The Morden Legion is planning a fundraiser to help build some financial support for a project to renovate its washrooms and make them accessible.

The event dubbed "Plants for Spring & Crafters' Things" is set for May 9 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Legion Hall, and it will include a luncheon as well as a 50/50 raffle.

The renovations will be a significant project for the Legion, noted president Jason Evert.

"We continue to raise funds," he said. "We've been working towards applying for grants through the province and different opportunities within the community such as the Morden Area Foundation and then planning events like our plants for spring and crafters thing as a fundraiser."

Evert noted the initial quotes for the project had been around $250,000, so it is a significant thing for the Legion to take on.

"It will be both the washrooms upstairs and downstairs," he noted.

The possible timeline for the project is uncertain at this point.

"It's really going to be dependent on the grants at this point, just with it being such a significant number," Evert said. "If we were able to get a couple of the larger grants that we have applied for, then there would be a good chance we could look to start this project in 2027.

"Knowing if we can't get those ones, then it's mostly going to be done through grassroots fundraising, and it would take substantially longer than that for us to get there.

"We're going to continue to apply and look for opportunities," said Evert. "Events like this are so important ... obviously, the grants are those bigger chunks of money, but events like this are also really good to show the space to people and see why this is needed ... it's important to also just be involving the community."

There was still a small opportunity for vendors to sign on for the sale, with a cutoff date of April 25. The cost for a vendor table is $35. If interested, you can call 204-823-0384 or e-mail williamsbk97@gmail.com.

Registration for 55+ Games is coming up May 9

By Ashleigh Viveiros

The registration deadline for the 2026 Manitoba 55+ Games in Stanley-Morden-Winkler is coming up fast.

Older athletes wanting to take part in the June 9-11 sporting competition need to sign up by Saturday, May 9.

There are a host of both individual and team sports and activities happening across the region that week, but volunteer Al Wirth has his sights set on one special category: track and field.

A longtime high school coach, Wirth is thrilled the 2026 Games will offer running events (100m, 200m, 400m, 800m, 1500m, and 3000m) as well as shot put and standing long jump.

While predicted walk and runs have long been a staple of the Games (and they are back again this year), the other track and field categories are rarely offered, Wirth shares.

"There have been in some years but it's hit and miss, depending on who wants to take it on at the host community," he says. "They've only really had track events when there is a good track in the town hosting."

With Morden's École Discovery Trails having a top-level track, it made sense to add them to the roster this year.

As with all Games categories, track and field athletes will be competing with others in their age group. And if it's been perhaps a few decades since you've ran, jumped, or hurled a shot put—or even if you've never done those things competitively at all—Wirth hopes you won't let that be a barrier to participation.

"I've talked to some people and they've said, 'Well, I've never thrown a shot put before.' That's fine—I'll teach you," he says. "It's not that hard ... come give it a try, see what you can do."

To help people get the rust out, Wirth will host a pre-Games practice on Sunday, June 7 at the ÉDT track (1079 Parkhill Dr.) from 1-3 p.m.

"There should be an advantage to having home field here," he says, chuckling. "People can just come out and practice, see what it's like—if you want to use the blocks you can, or see what the long jump looks like, just to familiarize yourself with it."

This will be Wirth's first time at the Games as an athlete, and he's looking forward to it.

"I haven't thrown competitive shot put or discus or anything in probably 30 years," he says. "But I'm going to try it. I used to throw in high school and I know I'm not going to be in the ballpark of what I could do back then, but I want to just do it."

"I just want to have some fun with it, and I think that's really the message

Al Wirth at the École Discovery Trails track where running, shot put, and standing long jump events will take place for June's Manitoba 55+ Games.

"WHY NOT TRY SOMETHING NEW?"

of the whole Games—nobody at 55 or 65 or 85 is an Olympic athlete, but why not try something new?"

PLENTY TO CHOOSE FROM

In addition to the track and field events, the sports line-up includes bowling, pool, snooker, cribbage, disc golf, regular golf, horseshoes, swimming, predicted run and walks, bocce ball, contract and duplicate bridge, floor shuffleboard, pickleball, lawn bowling, arts and crafts, slo-pitch, and even horseback riding (though that last one is at Bird's Hill Park).

Lois Dudgeon has been an athlete at the Games for decades, competing in both golf and pickleball, and was also the longtime leader of the Pembina Valley team. Her first foray at the event was in 2002, when Morden hosted it for the first time. Winkler has also hosted it once before, back in 1995.

Dudgeon is thrilled to see the Games coming back to her own backyard, and eager to see old friends.

"What I enjoy the most about it each year is all the people—it's one of those events where you keep running into the same people year after year that you may not see at any other time of the year," she shares.

Whether you're a returning athlete or a newcomer, it's a welcoming group, Dudgeon says, one whose focus is less on being uber-competitive and more on simply having fun together being active.

"The competition part of it is really not a big deal," she says, noting the Games' longtime slogan spells it out. "Fun, fitness and friendship—three good reasons to keep participating in the Games."

Kyle Nixon named Coach of the Month

By Voice staff

Morden Collegiate's Kyle Nixon has been named the March Payworks Coach of the Month by the Manitoba High School Athletic Association.

"Nixon has had a tremendous impact on the Morden Thunder hockey program this season," the citation said, noting he has "devoted countless hours to creating an environment that has helped players develop as student-athletes and positive community members."

"Coach Nixon prioritizes academics and a team-first mentality, which helped the Thunder excel in the classroom and on the ice, capturing the Thunder's fourth consecutive league championship for Zone 4.

"Coach Nixon creates a team environment of positive competition and excitement for the players to enjoy the game and work on self-improvement throughout the season."

In addition to coaching Thunder hockey, he also heads up the school's baseball team.

The Forge Gym hosting novice strongman competition Saturday

By Ashleigh Viveiros

StrongManitoba and The Forge Gym are hosting a Novice Showdown in Winkler this weekend, and anyone interested in seeing budding strong men and women show off their skills is welcome to come check it out.

The day—which starts at 11 a.m. at the gym at 319 Manitoba Rd. on Saturday, April 25—is an opportunity for those new to the sport to flex their muscles.

“This is for the people who haven’t been doing it for very long. They don’t need any experience coming into it,” says Ryan Froese, gym owner and one of the organizers of the event alongside fellow accomplished local strongman competitors Ariel Griffith and Eryn Penner.

“We typically keep the events fairly simple. Things that, honestly, if you’ve been in a gym or you’ve been even in a blue collar work environment, you’ve probably done things similar to it,” Froese said.

The lineup kicks off with a truck pull followed by a log clean and press for reps, a wagon wheel axle deadlift, farmer’s carry, and a sandbag and keg carry and load medley. There are male and female, teen, and non-novice 50+ categories.

At press time, they had around 30 people registered to take part, so it should be a great day of competition, Froese says.

“It should be a pretty entertaining show. If people want to come and watch, the doors will be open,” he says, noting admission is free. “Anyone can just waltz on in and come and check it out.”

Froese got into competing in strongman events over a decade ago at the urging of a friend.

“I got tricked into it,” he says, laughing. “A friend of mine who was coaching me at the time, he kept telling me I should really try strongman. I kept telling him no, I didn’t want to.”

But one day at the gym this friend and some others were lifting and moving around a heavy keg, and they challenged Froese to give it a try.

“This happened a couple more times where he kept getting me into different events, and I was finally like, okay, okay, I’ll try it. I did a competition and I’ve been hooked every since.”

He in turn got Griffith, now his wife, into it in much the same way.

“We started dating and I was already going to the gym a bit, so he was like, ‘Let’s lift heavier’ and I went, ‘Sure,’” she shares. Griffith has since competed at numerous events, ranking sixth at nationals last year.

The mix of personal accomplishment and a supportive community is what’s kept her at it.

“I like continuously trying to improve the weight that I’m lifting, ... I like seeing those numbers go up,” she says. “If you like seeing improvement, it’s fun to do, because you can always see more improvement in this sport.”

Penner, meanwhile, is heading into her third season of competition. She placed first provincially last fall and third nationally, and also competed in the Arnold Pro-Am competition in Ohio last month, ranking 12th.

“Apparently I’m pretty strong,” she jokes. “I was following The Forge on Instagram and saw they had posted the weights for a novice competition. I had been lifting weights for about six months leading up to that and realized I was already moving those weights.”

She got first place at that novice event, and the rest is history.

“I fell in love with the community, the support, the engagement,” Penner says. “And like Ariel said, also just seeing the continuous improvement ... there’s always room for improvement. And the community is great. They’ll keep encouraging you to keep growing and getting stronger.”

“It’s a really great environment,” agrees Froese. “The culture is good, the crowd is always really welcoming. It’s just an easy place to be and you can always strive to be better.”

You can check it out for yourself this weekend at The Forge Gym.

> ACCESS CU, FROM PG. 7

Wiebe emphasized Access remains committed to delivering exceptional service and strengthening the trust their members place in the credit union.

“Over the past year, we continued to enhance the member experience by listening closely, responding quickly and designing solutions that reflect our members’ evolving needs,” she said.

“Several new online banking features were introduced to enhance convenience and control for members including CRA Direct Deposit, which allows members to select their deposit account directly through online banking,” Wiebe noted, adding there was also “debit card management, enabling members to lock or block debit cards to prevent unauthorized use, and Aviso wealth investment integration, which lets members view their Aviso wealth investment accounts within online and mobile banking.”

And with the ever-changing cybersecurity threats, Wiebe said they remain focused on safety.

“We have increased and enhanced monitoring systems, expanded additional authentication layers and increased investment in education and protection against emerging threats,” she said. “We also launched a 24-hour fraud emergency support, giving members access to help whenever they need it. At the same time, we are in the early stages of leveraging the use of artificial intelligence to assist in operational efficiencies and support members more effectively.”

Her report also acknowledged that some members experienced technology-related challenges over the past year. Wiebe said they are committed to addressing these issues.

“Our focus is on improving the stability, reliability and overall performance of our online and mobile banking platform.”

Another point of emphasis was the credit union’s commitment to giving back to and investing in their communities.

It was noted that they contributed over $2.1 million to local initiatives in 2025. Access employees also recorded more than 18,000 volunteer hours and raised $150,971 through the Jeans for Charity program.

In addition, a partnership with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers continued to create impact through the Tackle Your Finances Like a Pro program, helping students across Manitoba build confidence in money management through financial literacy education. They also raised $116,182.90 for Ronald McDonald House and Katie Cares charities through the Access charity golf tournament.

Wiebe emphasized the importance of Access CU staff, who continue to be the driving force behind the organization’s success.

“We expanded learning and leadership development opportunities to support career growth and promote employee engagement. We were also proud to be one of Manitoba’s top employers for the 11th consecutive year, a testament to the dedication of our more than 925 employees and our commitment to creating a workplace where people feel supported and empowered.”

She concluded with the thought that “as we move into the year ahead, our focus is clear: to build on our strong foundation, embrace innovation and pursue excellence in everything we do. We will continue to respond thoughtfully to market changes, enhance our products and services and invest in our technology and talent. This includes making thoughtful and sometimes difficult decisions so that we can continue to invest in our strategic priorities.”

Meanwhile, on behalf of the board, Letkeman touched on their strong financial position as well as their continued commitment to serving their communities.

“From a business standpoint, 2025 was another year of strong growth for Access,” he said.

He highlighted the focused funding grant, which awarded $25,000 to 10 Manitoba schools to enhance nutrition and wellness programs, and noted Access overall was able to support more than 1,080 organizations across Manitoba in “enhancing the commitment to the communities in which we all live.”

He concluded with a reference to operational changes, including the branch closures.

“We have made some difficult decisions which affect some of our smaller communities. We know the closure of a local branch is disappointing and for some members deeply personal. A branch isn’t just a building. It’s part of how people connect with Access Credit Union and their community,” he said. “While our physical footprint is changing, our commitment to the community is not. We will continue to invest in local initiatives, support community events and organizations and remain active partners in places where our members call home.”

Eight sustainable careers young people should consider

By News Canada

Making long-term career plans can be a daunting process, especially for someone just starting out. With so many options to apply your skills and talents, consider the many industries in this country advancing sustainable solutions.

Canada is home to dynamic, growing sectors that contribute to sustainability. Here are some of the energy and natural resource industries that are looking for new employees:

Mining and critical minerals. Canada has been a leader in the global mining and minerals industry for decades. Today, the sector is becoming more sustainable: mitigating environmental harm from old mines, adopting green mining practices and adapting water management, to name a few changes.

Nuclear energy and Liquid Natural Gas (LNG). These are two key energy sources for Canada, given our rich uranium and natural gas deposits. Both require advanced technology and trained specialists to manage risks and access them sustainably. Wages in the nuclear sector are as much as 30 per cent higher than other jobs in the same community.

Renewable electricity. Electricity generation from wind, water and solar sources is a fast-growing sector in Canada. There are career opportunities in every aspect of renewable energy, from developing technology to building and installing systems, as well as planning and management required for those projects. Electricity sector jobs come with competitive wages and attractive benefits, even for entry-level workers.

Forestry. Responsible forest management is more than laws and policies. It requires skilled workers, from technicians and millwrights working in sustainable lumber, to arborists monitoring and managing forests' health.

Transportation. Electric vehicle (EV) technology is making Canada's transportation sector more sustainable and lowering emissions. There are multiple opportunities in the construction and maintenance of EVs and energy storage systems, as well as for operators, bringing essential goods to communities across the country.

Construction, energy efficiency and green buildings. Throughout Canada, there are construction or renovation projects to reduce buildings' environmental impact. This means job opportunities in designing and constructing new buildings, as well as projects to retrofit existing structures.

Carbon management. This emerging sector is key to Canada's net-zero emissions goals. It includes a variety of connected technologies and initiatives to capture, store or make use of carbon dioxide. It's a diverse sector generating a wide range of career opportunities, from facility and field operators, geologists and data analysts, to instrumentation technicians and regulatory affairs professionals.

Climate adaptation and environmental management. Effectively adapting to climate change requires skills, knowledge and talent from a wide range of sectors and disciplines, including Indigenous guardians and environmental data and mapping specialists. This area of work will continue to grow and evolve and presents an opportunity to build a career that helps protect Canada's future.

Practical skilled trades education, such as an apprenticeship, can prepare you to make the most of these opportunities. Choosing a career in advancing sustainability in Canada can contribute to the country's future while building your own. Learn more at canada.ca/sustainablejobs.
